President’s Report

President Meehan highlighted various achievements across the 5 campuses that emphasize the extent to which the University discharges its mission as a land-grant and research intensive institution in service to the Commonwealth and globally.

UMass Amherst has been named the “Top Producing Institution” for the Fulbright scholarship program for the second straight year. The campus also has 12 graduate and undergraduate students and 7 faculty receiving Fulbright Fellowships. UMass Amherst is also the first public university in New England to receive a CyberCorps Scholarship—computer scientist Brian Levine received a $4.2 million grant from the National Science Foundation to bring the scholarship service program to UMass Amherst.

Eight undergraduates at UMass Boston participated in the Northeast division of the National Collegiate Cyber Defense Competition and won first place. Michael Denney, a doctoral candidate in the Human Security and Global Governance program within the McCormack Graduate School for Policy and Global Studies was selected by the Chicago Council on Global Affairs as one of its Next Generation leaders in the area of food security.

The Dartmouth campus has unveiled some of the mysteries associated with Black Holes. Professors Khanna and University of Maryland researchers have developed a first of its kind computer simulation of the interior of a rotating black hole. This research was funded by the National Science Foundation and aided by the use of the innovative supercomputing resources of UMass Dartmouth’s Center for Scientific Computing & Visualization Research (CSCVR).

Also at the Dartmouth campus, Bioengineering Professor Yong Kim, Textile Chemistry alumnus Armand Lewis, and Medical Engineering Professor Vijaya Chalivendra developed an innovative material called Flocked Energy Absorbing Material (FEAM) to be used in helmets and body armor. This material can absorb energy from blunt forces and reduce the risk of trauma by mitigating impact energies. A $250,000 grant was received from Phase Three of the Head Health Challenge developed by the National Football League, Under Armour, General Electric, and the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

Drug and medical device corporation Allergan’s (the maker of Botox) acquisition of Massachusetts startup Anterios is the largest deal ever involving intellectual property developed at UMass Lowell. Professor Stephen McCarthy and Professor Emeritus Robert Nicolosi developed technology which delivers Botox by smoothing it over the skin like lotion versus via injection. This is the largest single intellectual property deal ever for UMass Lowell and for all other campuses in the system with the exception of UMass Medical School.

UMass Medical School has become the first medical school in the state to develop and implement a new opioid conscious curriculum. This comes after Governor Charlie Baker’s request that the state’s four medical schools work with representatives of the Massachusetts Medical Society and the state’s Department of Public Health to reach a consensus on educational tools and competencies that will help providers face the growing epidemic of prescription drug abuse. The Medical School will initiate Phase I of the opioid curriculum initiative this current academic year.
