President’s Report
President Meehan reported on the University’s research enterprise, noting that research expenditures in FY17 reached a record-high $670 million, up $37 million over the previous year—the largest single-year increase in research funding at UMass in nearly a decade. UMass remains the third-largest research university in Massachusetts, trailing only Harvard and MIT, and the fourth-largest in all of New England.

President Meehan addressed concerns regarding active shooter preparedness in light of the increasing frequency of shootings around the country noting that emergency preparedness programs have been established at each of the UMass campuses that aim to prevent, prepare for and respond to adverse events. The campuses have a variety of active threat awareness programs, and each campus has a formal active shooter training program based on national standards, enabling key campus stakeholders to immediately respond to an active shooter situation.

The UMass system is in the process of developing an active threat video for the UMass campuses, thanks to a $100,000 grant from the Executive Office of Public Safety and Security. President Meehan stated that the Board will receive a written report on the University’s active shooter preparedness via BoardVantage.

President Meehan provided highlights of system-wide and campus achievements. U.S. News & World Report recently released its 2019 edition of Best Graduate Schools and ranked several graduate school programs at UMass among the best in the nation. UMass Lowell’s graduate program in criminology was ranked #2 in New England and #27 in the nation, while the Francis College of Engineering was ranked #3 overall for graduate programs offered by public universities in New England, and the nuclear engineering degree was ranked #19 in the nation.

The UMass Medical School was ranked 14th in the nation for primary care education and #46 for research, climbing four spots in that category. At UMass Boston several programs also made the Top 100, including the Master of Nursing at #66, the Doctor of Nursing Practice at #73 and the Master’s program in public affairs at #77.

UMass Amherst has entered into a partnership with the Chan Zuckerberg Initiative, which includes an initial grant of $5.5 million to UMass Amherst’s Center for Data Science to support the Computable Knowledge Project, which is using artificial intelligence to facilitate breakthroughs in scientific research and development.

UMass Boston recently held the largest Welcome Day in its history, with more than 600 prospective students attending the first of two Welcome Day sessions—a 41% increase over last year; the UMass Dartmouth community spoke with NASA astronaut and UMass Dartmouth alumnus Scott Tingle while he was aboard the International Space Station about conducting science in space and applying a UMass education to the real world. The 2017 first-time bar pass rate for the UMass School of Law was 72.73%, surpassing four area private law schools.

At UMass Lowell, a new 10-year, $5 million research partnership with Avangrid will advance the development and implementation of clean energy technologies. The UMass Medical School recently had another successful match day, with 44 students matched in internal medicine, family medicine and pediatrics, representing 41% of the class. Fourteen students are going into emergency medicine, and 5 into obstetrics & gynecology.
